GENERAL INFORMATION

AARS - (All-American Rose Selections). Symbol of top quality garden performance. AARS roses are tested in 32 official gardens all over the U.S. in a wide range of conditions and evaluated for two years by rose experts. These roses are judged superior in color, foliage, fragrance and resistance to adverse growing conditions and disease.

HYBRID TEA – An individual long-stemmed, many petalled large flower.

GRANDIFLORA – A category recognized in the U.S. but not in Britain, also produces large flowers, but often in clusters.

Culture: Hybrid Tea and Grandifloras grow 3 to 5 feet tall and half as wide, producing blooms continuously from early summer until hard frost. They have identical needs: fertile, well-prepared and well-drained soil; and full sun. Don't crowd the plants; good air circulation will help prevent fungal diseases. They like frequent, deep waterings and regular applications of fertilizer. Mulch is beneficial, as is giving a monthly fertilizer/insecticide treatment. Remove spent blooms, pruning back to a strong-looking five-leaflet branch.

FLORIBUNDA – Derived and refined from Hybrid Teas, Floribundas are excellent roses for landscaping. They are shorter than Hybrid Teas and produce profuse clusters of blooms through the summer months.

DAVID AUSTIN ENGLISH ROSES – He created repeat-flowering, disease-resistant shrubs for today's smaller gardens. They are loved for their heavily petalled, old-rose blooms and lavish perfume.

ROMANTICA – From Provence in the south of France.

RUGOSA – Among the toughest. They originated from China, Japan and Korea centuries ago. Differ greatly in appearance than other roses. They are dense and robust in form, very thorny and the leaves are thick and heavily veined. The blooms appear fragile – somewhat like crinkled silk. Plump rose hips appear following the bloom period in spring and foliage turns an attractive bronze color in the fall. They make wonderful hedges. They are very hardy and disease resistant and do NOT like to be sprayed with chemicals. Spraying will cause the leaves to turn yellow.

OWN ROOT - Most improved, versatile rose plant. Hardier, better formed plants that require less maintenance. No suckers. Better appearance and form. Better shape in the garden. No bud union. Naturally hardier. More pliable roots.

GRAFTED – Most roses consist of one plant grafted onto the root system, or rootstock, of another; this is done to increase the vigor or longevity of the desired flowering plant. The rootstock is often more vigorous than the grafted plant and, if allowed to grow, its suckers will eventually overwhelm the grafted plant. Removing suckers will ensure that the vigor of the roots passes into the grafted plant.
